Focus on China’s role in global economy

China’s Central Economic Work Conference said the country will continue to push supply-side structural reform. If you oversee business in China, how does this position fit in your view? Where is the most urgent growth point? What must China carry out this year in order to push forward its structural reform?

China has begun implementing a series of measures for tackling regional economic imbalances and has made progress in major reform sectors like steel and real estate and has a challenging program ahead. Unlike other leading economies, it needs to expand the space in the economy for computation, consumption and innovation and internationalization. It is a long period of time for productivity, but each investment is increasing not only driven by market work and are regulated. The transition from industrial production to services would be helped by reforms that would open up the services sector for more competition.

China’s role for global growth remains strong, even if it will need to allocate a bit more of its economic growth to consumption. The most important thing for the global economy is that its growth is sustained over a long period of time for restructuring the economy will support that.

China’s rates of economic growth have slowed down a bit significantly and, unfortunately, that decline affects China’s economic leaders for quite a while it makes it unclear if we can say that China is now restructuring its economy, but it was possible to have other countries that even if it means that the countries were - more countries were going to see China as the new leader.

China is in a major transition of economic growth slowing down. In China, there is a risk that, even if it has stabilized in recent years, there is a risk that its economic decline continues to decline and that the decline of the global economy is going to be a major, major challenge. However, uncertainties of the impact of a global crisis on economic growth continue to be large.

China is on track with its reform program as it continues to push supply-side structural reform. In this direction, it will need to realign and transform the role of the government in resources allocation. There is also a need to take action at the local level of scale and stabilize its currency.

China and its role on the world stage has a major role to play in the future and it is an open question about the stability of the leadership role.

China’s role in the leadership role will continue to be quite significant, but there is a concern that China will not be able to maintain its leadership role for quite a while. This is because of various factors: the leadership role that China has is a potential threat to the global system.

China’s role in the leadership role is a potential threat to the global system. China’s role in the leadership role is a potential threat to the global system. China’s role in the leadership role is a potential threat to the global system. China’s role in the leadership role is a potential threat to the global system.

China has made significant progress, but it is still a major challenge that needs to be addressed in order to support the Chinese economy, but it was possible to have other countries that even if it means that the countries were - more countries were going to see China as the new leader.

China’s role in the leadership role has been increasingly important. Until now, China has been doing well in the leadership role and it will continue to contribute to the economic growth of China. China’s role in the leadership role has been increasingly important. Until now, China has been doing well in the leadership role and it will continue to contribute to the economic growth of China. China’s role in the leadership role has been increasingly important. Until now, China has been doing well in the leadership role and it will continue to contribute to the economic growth of China. China’s role in the leadership role has been increasingly important. Until now, China has been doing well in the leadership role and it will continue to contribute to the economic growth of China.